Do you often shop at supermarkets? If you do, you should start thinking about where the food you buy comes from. A lot of it probably comes from the other side of the world. This is bad for the environment, and today many people are worried about what are called food miles, that is how far their food travels from the producer to their local shop. So what can you do? Always try to buy local products and do your best not to waste the food that you buy. Some experts say that 20% of all the food we buy is wasted. The next way to help the environment is avoid products that contain a lot of chemicals. These are also bad for your health and do not have as many vitamins as natural products.

1. A lot of our foodother parts of the world.
2. Think about how..... has travelled.
